FROM THE PASTOR'S DESK

Mutually beneficial relationships

Text: Ephesians 6:1-9

As part of our journey through the book of Ephesians, we've started to explore relationships and today we will be going through Paul's advice for children and fathers, slaves and masters. The bible never supported slavery. It was a cultural development that was eventually abolished by Christianity. In our text today, Paul challenged the hierarchical relationship between slaves and their master, calling for adherence to higher standards in service to God.

In the same manner, he asked children to obey their parents. In return, parents should not provoke their children. God testified of Abraham, that he will bring up his children to fear God. The role of the parent is to nurture their children to maturity. But we must understand there are no perfect children or parents. There will be mistakes.

So we must prayerfully discharge these duties and create an environment where both children and parents can thrive. Authority should not be abused. Balance of power in any relationship is vital and relationship is at the heart of Christianity. In Matthew 20:20-28, Jesus used the respectful request from the mother of the two Zebedee sons to teach his disciples that leaders should serve rather than lord over their followers.

Leaders must be concerned for followers / servants, care for them and work towards their wellbeing. Balancing the power within a relationship is for the benefit and success of every member. If there's love, there should be no abuse of whatever power exists. Ecclesiastes 4:9-12 says two are better than one. When we work together in love to build a healthy relationship, we're all the better for putting in the effort.

One of the emblematic scriptures Jesus left us is in John 13:1-17, where Jesus washed his disciple's feet. It was an example he expected us to follow in all our relationships. In other words, you shouldn't be in a relationship for yourself, but for the other person(s) and should ask yourself daily how you can make their lives better. How can the quality of their lives be better for having you in their lives?

Paul talked about our relationship with God, the Holy Spirit, each other, children, the church and so on, emphasizing that the dynamic in each case must be mutually beneficial. We must not exploit or oppress each other in our relationships.

Bottom line:

As much as we must seek after God, he also desire to spend time with us. It is why he sought Adam and Eve out in the garden and boasted about Job. In the same way, we must establish and nurture mutually beneficial relationships that will enrich our lives.
