FROM THE PASTOR'S DESK

Vaccine and Christianity

Text: John 5:1-9; 14

God created us with immune system to protect us. But over time, some diseases may leave us vulnerable or weak, unable to fight off some viruses, especially those that mutate or are new. Vaccines trigger our immune systems to respond either through taking a shot of the weakened virus or purified proteins (antigens) of the virus.

COVID-19 vaccines currently in use are based on mRNA (messenger RNA – RiboNucleic Acid) technology. Instead of a weakened virus or the viral protein, we get the gene material – mRNA – which helps our cells to make the viral protein. mRNA is a synthetic and not extracted from actual viruses. Also, it only stays active in the body for only a few days before it decays. Meanwhile, its immune memory is retained so our immune system can react the same way again if necessary.

Should we take vaccines?

We could answer this question in several ways. A medical historian called H.E. Sigerist once said “Christianity came into the world as the religion of healing.” We see proof of this in the life of Jesus too, who sometimes implied a direct link between sin and illness. So, it's probably no wonder that we do the same, wondering if our sins made us ill (John 9:1-2).

So, it may be customary to ask that we depend on God for healing. Considering this, we could perhaps conclude we need prayers, perhaps for forgiveness of sins, and not vaccines or other man-made medicines for COVID-19. In other words, should we wait for God to heal us instead of taking vaccines, perhaps as a show of faith?

One thing to consider is that God gave man the intelligence for the advances we see today, including medical ones. And there's precedence in the bible. In 1 Timothy 5:23, we read about Paul's counsel to Timothy to stop drinking water and wine to settle his stomach and cater for some frequent ailments. We also have reasons to assume Paul would probably counsel the same about vaccines if they were created in his time (1 Cor 10:23).

Furthermore, if we believe we've been sent to spread the good news (Matt 28:19-20), healing is a big part, following in Jesus' footsteps. Just as we would care for ourselves, it is part of our ministry to care for our neighbour (Mark 12:31). By taking the vaccine, we could be preventing the spread of COVID-19 virus, helping ourselves and our neighbours.

Ultimately, it is a decision we have to make for ourselves, taking care not to be swept away by irrelevant conspiracy theories and unfounded claims about vaccines or other medicines. We've recently been challenged to prove by the way we live that we love and believe in Christ. If we trust in the Holy Spirit to guide us in the truth of God's will, we can discern for ourselves what is true (John 17:14-19) and trust in God to bear us home to him (Phil 1:6).

Bottom line:

We should be like the Berean Jews described in Acts 17:11 and test everything (1 Thess 5:21), searching out the truth. We can also trust that God can make everything work together for our good (Rom 8:28).
