FROM THE PASTOR'S DESK

Christian perspective on climate change

Text: Genesis 2:4-15

When God created the Garden of Eden, he told Adam to “tend and keep it” (Gen 2:15). This suggests that God expects us to be stewards of the earth and all he had created. There's no doubt the world's climate is changing at an alarming and damaging rate. What's not clear is what we can do or even if we should feel responsible for redressing the ruination. What did God intend when he put man on the earth?

In our text today and in Leviticus 25:4-13, we see clear instructions about how to tend to the land and ensure it is given a rest every 7 years. Farmers sometimes do this through rotational farming, leaving a section of their land fallow for regeneration and rotating that each year. In fact, God may have warned us of the disasters happening around us now when the land is not given a rest (Lev 26:27-35). Sometimes, the Israelites were forced to observe this instruction (2 Chron 36:21).

There's a good reason for giving the land a rest. It is so that it continues to yield fruit in its season for us (Psa 1:3). That also means we have a responsibility not to abuse what God has put under our care. The vision God have of us, the land and the creatures of the world he created can be seen in Isaiah 11:1-9. It speaks of all of God's creation living together in harmony and peace. Reducing wastage and making the world around us stable and sustainable is a collective responsibility.

Bottom line:

While the government has greater power to effect change, each of us have a responsibility to do our part and care for the environment. Some of the things we can do include taking fewer flights, changing our cars to electric, reducing the meat we eat and so on. Like Jesus would do, we must care for others and those who will come after us (Isa 42:1-4). Above all, it is important to understand that what we each do can make a difference.
