The portrait of Jesus

Creating an atmosphere for miracles

Text: Matthew 9:27-30

In this portrait of Jesus, we can see him as the protagonists and two blind men petitioning him to help them. Instead, Jesus asked them if they believe and then he told them their faith would heal them. So, the two men entered the scene blind and left rejoicing. A question for us may be who was most responsible for the miracle? Jesus specifically told them their faith would heal them. So, is it really Jesus or their faith that made it happen? What if they didn't have enough faith?

Sometimes when people die, some give eulogies that others may not believe about the character of the person that died. God can be everything to us or nothing. He can have a lot of impact or very little. We see this in Mark 6:1-6. From all over, people came looking for Jesus and he would heal them, casting out demons and raising the death.

However, when he got to Nazareth, his home town, while they were amazed by his wisdom, they couldn't trust him or have faith in him. In their eyes, he was Jesus – the man, not Jesus – the son of God. Because of their unbelief, the scriptures said Jesus couldn't perform many miracles among them and they were his people.

The people of Nazareth created an atmosphere where miracles couldn't happen. We Christians are his people too. Are there times we prevent God from performing miracles among us, because of our unbelief? Do we sometimes humanise Jesus too much or become so familiar with him that we stop him from transforming our lives? Testimonies are supposed to show us what's possible, but we must have faith in the God who can perform the impossible for them to occur in our lives.

Like the woman with the issue of blood (Lk 8:43-48), when we allow the word of God to touch us, it should be transformative and our authority begins with understanding (Matt 16:13-19). Although the most important sign of salvation is a life transformed, God wants us to thrive and have a good quality of life, which may from time to time need miraculous acts.

In contrast, we may be Christians without showing any impact of God in our lives. We need to exercise the same faith like the centurion, who understands what authority and the importance of obedience (Matt 8:5-13). Jesus called it faith and the centurion's servant. The book of Hebrews takes this further, saying we understand by faith (Heb 11:1-3 NLT).

This builds the kind of confidence Elijah had when he did the contrarian feat and asked the prophets of Baal to pour water on the altar before praying for God to set fire to it (1 Kings 18:30-39).

Bottom line:

As Christians, rather than chase after things and torture ourselves about what we don't have, scriptures teaches us to learn contentment because all of that is meaningless (Phil 3:8). Jesus said, life is not measured by the things we own (Lk 12:15).
