FROM THE PASTOR'S DESK

Does the bible support free speech?

Text: John 17:14-16

Freedom of speech is essentially our right to communicate about political issues. This means any communication with relevance for the public, including comments on government policies, criticisms of public officials or demands for certain rights etc. In some countries, this is codified as part of an established democratic process, but still subject to legislative processes.

What may have become clear over the years is that such freedom can be interpreted subjectively. What's freedom of speech for one person, in a community, organization, country may be very different from others. In that kind of environment, Christians, our faith and Jesus often invite criticism, mockery and ridicule too e.g. Jerry Springer - the Opera (April 2003 to February 2005).

We can also see examples of unwelcomed freedom of speech in the Bible. An example is when Paul spoke in Jerusalem, addressing the Jews, vilified for preaching to the Gentiles (Acts 21:17--22:30). Both John the Baptist and Jesus were ridiculed by the authorities of their day (Mark 6:14-16:20; 5:40; Luke 16:14; 22:63-23:36). Although free speech is often implied or justified by references to free will (Genesis 2:16--17), there's no specific reference to it in the Bible.

However, we may take some guidance from verses talking about speech in general, many rooted in avoidance of sinful behaviours that may lead to bondage (John 8:31--36; Prov. 10:19). The Bible is quite clear about not using our words to tear others down (Exodus 20:7, 16; Leviticus 19:11; Ephesians 4:15, 25, 29; Colossians 3:8--9; Titus 3:2). Therefore, our freedom to speak shouldn't be taken as license to mock or debase others, whoever they are and whether they're in authority over us or not.

We may see an illustration in the way Queen Esther spoke up for what is right and saved her people from Haman's evil plot, at great risk to herself. With sensitivity and skilful manoeuvring to eliminate the danger (Esther 2:21-23; 3:1-2; 5-6; 4:11-16; 5:6-8; 7:3-8). In general, a couple of things should be more important to us than fighting for or establishing our rights. Speaking the truth (Eph 4:15) and not destroying or debasing others with our words (Eph 4:29).

Bottom line:

As Christians, we're always called to take a different higher road in all things. While we're expected to challenge ungodly practices, we must do so with sensitivity and the skill it requires.
