FROM THE PASTOR'S DESK

The sufficiency of Christ

Text: Colossians 3:11-17

Our text today reminds us again of the command to forgive each other. It is not a choice (Col 3:13). There's no ambiguity on some issues in the bible and forgiveness is one of them. As with some legislations, the text also prohibits discrimination among Christians.

Whether you're Jew or a Gentile, circumcised or uncircumcised, barbaric, uncivilized, a slave or free, we're told Christ is all that matters. In Christ, we are one body (1 Cor 12:27). Christ and our devotion to God is a commonality that should be prioritised by all Christians (Psa 9:1-2).

After Jesus fed five thousand, he challenged the people searching him and asked if it was because of the food. He then made it clear God alone fed their fathers manna in the desert and added that he was the bread of life. If they never want to hunger or thirst again, they must come to him (Jn 6:22-35). When someone performs miracles of healing or something extraordinary, we should remember it is God and not the man or woman.

The bread given by God has several remarkable characteristics we should note. When Moses told the people to go out and gather the manna, they couldn't resist gathering more than they needed, even when told not to (Ex 16:17-21; 2 Cor 8:13-16). They didn't understand the principle of sufficiency. God's provision for each day will always be enough.

In other words, however little or more of Christ we have will always be enough. No need to stress or worry about how much of Christ we should have. It is enough to just have him and the woman with the issue of blood found that out, with only one touch (Lk 8:43-48). The same applies to our faith in Christ. It can be as small as a mustard seed and can still move mountains (Matt 17:19-20).

God's mercies and steadfast love never ceases and they're renewed for each of us every morning (Lam 3:22-23). The Israelites failed to heed God's words, even after he talked to them ten times (Num 14:20-23). In contrast, Moses accepted God's judgement eventually (Deut 3:23-26). The lyrics and verses of the song "In Christ alone" tell us our hope can only be found in Christ ("In Christ alone" by Adrienne Camp). It is easy to misunderstand that or abuse and take it for granted, but we can't afford to (Lk 12:48).

Bottom line:

There's no need to fret that we don't have enough of Christ. All we need is Christ and a touch from him is sufficient.
