FROM THE PASTOR'S DESK

How should Christians view refugees?

Text: Matthew 25:31-40

It is necessary to ask ourselves this question after a man threw petrol bombs into a refugee camp in Dover and then killed himself. It is said that at least 27.1 million people are refugees all over the world today. That's the scale of the problem and we may need to ask ourselves who counts as one.

A refugee is defined as anyone, forced to live their place of abode or country for reasons including war, natural disasters and so on. Immigrants are different, often leaving their homes for a better life or to be with someone they love. Also, they usually have the option of going back.

Often, refugees are not able to return to where they've come from and their lives are never the same even when they do. That's why they put themselves at risk and go to great lengths, rain or shine, to get to a place of salvation. Pressure on local resources is one of the reasons communities or people turn on refugees or immigrants. They then get blamed for government policies or problems that aren't their fault.

The first thing we need to have for them is compassion (Matt 9:36). Whatever their reasons for leaving, it is the least we can offer them. In most countries, these people are confined to places that are sometimes worse than a prison and subjected to hosts of abuses. God asks us to love our brothers as we love ourselves (Matt 22:39; Gal 6:10). We need to pray for them and for the government to make the right policies. We can also support charities caring for them.

Pray also for all nations, that the Lord will build them up so there will be no need for their citizens to flee in droves. Let's stop seeing them as people taking away resources, jobs, houses or other things from us and think about what must have driven them to go through their journey. That may aid us to change our mindset or any prejudice against them and offer compassion or help instead.

Bottom line:

We are called to love our neighbours and render help to all who need us. As Christians, that should be our response. We're all brothers and sisters (Gal 3:28). It is only the grace of God that separates us from such fates and we will one day be together, when Jesus takes us all home (Rev 7:9).
