The woman question ... contd

If we follow the doctrines of Paul to the letter, the answer to our core question is "No." Women can't teach, lead worship or have authority over men, even in the children's church. However, like Moses Paul was establishing a church and he offered rules and standards for orderliness in accordance with the Mosaic laws and the culture of his time. We can also assume he expected the church he built to grow, mature and evolve (1 Cor 3:10-13).

There's no doubt women are undervalued and their position denigrated all through the scriptures. Prophet Isaiah once said God is punishing a nation when women and children lead them (Isaiah 3:12). Even when mentioned, most can only operate under the banner of their husbands (Judges 4:4). However, God created men and women as equals (Gen 1:26-28). In fact, men were supposed to leave their homes and cleave to their wives in the original plan (Gen 2:24). After Adam sinned, this changed (Gen 3:6-13; 16), but salvation have redeemed us from the law (Rom 6:14). That's why later, Peter counselled husbands to honour their wives, calling them joint heirs (1 Pet 3:7).

Bottom line:

The original plan of God is clear and even in the OT, fairness is often maintained (Num 27:1-11; Josh 17:3-6). Christianity is intended to be the agent of change, to transform the world. We need not remain mired under the shackles of the law, from which we've been set free (Rom 6:14).

FROM THE PASTOR'S DESK

The woman question

Text: 1 Timothy 2:8-12

Are women permitted to teach in the church? Paul said we should remain the pillar of truth until our Lord comes (1 Tim 3:15) and on that note, are we trying to conform to the world or should we make the world conform to us? There may be some things we may find challenging today, but we should also appreciate that none of us is infallible, including Apostle Paul and he made that clear in his letters. For example, he would say at times that something he said was his opinion on certain matters, stating there are times we know in part and the perfect is yet to come (1 Cor 13:9-10).

Paul's response when he was asked a question about marriage could help inform our discussion today (1 Cor 7:7-40). The ideal he preferred is to remain single, but he also said each should live the life they've been called to live. The sum total of this response gives the impression that he thought of the issue as an unnecessary distraction, saying something similar about widows (1 Tim 5:11-16).

In our text today, he was unequivocal about the parts men and women should play and the kind of life they should lead. Men should pray and the women are not permitted to teach or have any authority over a man. In another scripture, he made it clear that women should stay silent in the church and only learn from their husband when they get home. In fact, he called it shameful for women to speak in church (1 Cor 14:33-35 – NKJV).

Paul said this was according to the law and we know Paul was referring to the Mosaic law. Over and above the ten commandments, they were the by-laws used by Moses to establish the nation of Israel. Paul was controversial and had to defend his teachings a lot. This was the case when they argued they about circumcision, with Peter and Paul on opposing sides (Gal 2:11-13). It is why Peter stated that his message have often been distorted by those who are ignorant (2 Pet 3:15-16).

However, when Jesus came, he challenged these laws again and again. In Christ, there's neither male or female (Gal 3:28). Paul said it was shameful for a woman to speak in the church because it is the prevailing culture of his time. Would we think the same today, especially when women are the majority in most churches? Also, in those days, men's age start from about thirteen years. So, if we adhere to his teaching today, we're saying a woman is not qualified to teach a thirteen-year-old.

We may often be selective in the laws we observe (Matt 23:1-38), but Christianity was designed to break barriers between Jews and Gentiles, slaves and owners, men and women (Gal 3:28) and the status /roles of women began to change in the early Church (e.g. Matt 22:23-30). Tradition says men go out to work and women stay at home and for years, society have denigrated "stay at home" mothers, seeing them as being lower than those engaged in physical or paid labour.
